Favre-bulous

Brett Favre stunned the 77,160 fans at Invesco Field at Mile High and a national television audience with a breathtaking 82-yard touchdown pass to Greg Jennings on the first snap of overtime, lifting the Packers to 19-13 victory that will rank as one of Favre's most thrilling and only add to his Hall of Fame legacy.

It was one of two picture-perfect deep balls thrown by Favre in the game. He also hit Jones for a 79-yard touchdown in the first quarter when the rookie receiver got behind Champ Bailey along the right sideline, made the catch, cut back across the field on his way to the end zone.

With the two long touchdowns, Favre finished 21-of-27 for 331 yards without an interception for a sterling 142.4 quarterback rating, his highest since the 2004 regular-season finale, when he posted a 151.4 mark in Chicago.

Ramphins

It was revealed today that the 0-8 Miami Dolphins and the 0-8 St. Louis Rams have been holding secret negotiations toward an eventual merger.

Sources in both cities first became aware that something was up when superduper giant 'FOR SALE' signs appeared on each city's football stadium. Initially the speculation was it was merely a prank promotion by media giant hogreport.com, but calls began to come in from Wolfsbutte, Montana that bumper stickers were appearing all over town with the slogan 'Ramphins - Catch the fever!'.

The NFL Commissioner's office released a statement addressing the rumors and speculation: 'In an effort to increase competitiveness in the NFL and to put St. Louis and Miami fans out of their misery, the League is wholly in support of this merger. Besides, it doesn't matter even if they do merge. They still won't win any games. Come to think of it, they can just close up shop and nobody will know the difference.'

Meanwhile, Wolfbutteans were going 'ga-ga' over the prospect of having their own NFL team. The local high school stadium was a cause for concern, but someone pointed out the bleachers would hold all the people who wanted to see their team in action. Some were disappointed in the unimaginative team name preferring something of a more local flavor like 'Butteheads', so a referendum is scheduled to decide the matter.

Pigskins Make Teams Whiff

Teams have scored only 483 points against the Pigskins this year. That's an average of 60 points per game. In week 5 the Blackcats scored a SFFL record low 25 points vs Pigskins.
